Asian Energy Partnership: Opportunities and Obstacles

Interdependence through trade and investment among Asian economies has led to the build-up of a highly sophisticated network in the region. No one can deny that Asian economies is to sustain and achieve sustainable economic growth and East Asia's economic development has historically progressed via the flying geese model of trade and investment linkages among developed economies, in particular, Japan and developing economies — first with NIEs, then ASEAN and China. South Korea enjoyed high economic performance through the 1960s, 1970s and 1980s following a similar pattern to the Japanese economic model. After the appreciation of the yen that resulted from the Plaza Accord in 1985, Japanese overseas investment rushed to the NIEs and ASEAN countries, leading to the current production networks prevalent throughout East Asia. South Korean investment has also surged into ASEAN. China started its 'reform and opening policy' in 1978 and attracted massive foreign direct investment especially from the 1990s. To date, China has recorded high economic growth comparable to Japan's in the 1950s and 1960s and is now often called the 'factory of the world'. However, judging from the widespread production networks in the region today, it is more accurate to say that East Asia, as a whole, is the factory of the world.

As a result of trade and investment-linked economic development in Asia, in particular East Asia, economic integration has progressed to a level of intraregional trade dependence of around 50 per cent, comparable to that of Europe in the 1970s and 1980s (see Figure 1). This business-led de facto economic integration is being followed by government-level efforts aimed at creating institutional economic integration through arrangements such as free trade agreements (FTAs). An FTA is often called an Economic Partnership Agreement (EPA) when a broader cooperation and institutional harmonisation agenda is included in addition to a trade liberalisation agenda. Government efforts are also fundamental in functional cooperation mechanisms, such as the 'Chiang Mai Initiative' (May 2000) in the currency field, especially after the Asian Financial Crisis of 1997-1998. Thus, it is programme, the Lumut plant now operates at 140 per cent of design capacity.<sup>10</sup>

Taking into consideration the 6th LNG train addition, the natural gas production in Brunei is projected to reach an annual 14.9 mtoe in 2010 and will stabilise around the 2010 level thereafter. To extend Brunei's oil reserves, the Brunei Policy was introduced in 1980.<sup>11</sup> Given that the policy was originally set at 150,000 barrels per day and the policy was revised only in the mid-1990s to allow production, the total oil supply in Brunei is projected to increase 10 per cent during the forecast period, reaching 11.1 million barrels per day.

Total Primary Energy Supply (TPES)

In 1981, Brunei's TPES dropped a significant 28 per cent from 1980 and has been fluctuating ever since. Nevertheless, in 2004 rebounded to a level similar to that of 1980, with oil and gas accounting for 27 per cent and 73 per cent of TPES in 2004, respectively.<sup>12</sup>

Brunei's TPES is projected to grow 1.3 per cent per year over the outlook period, reaching 3.1 mtoe in 2030. Growth is driven primarily by population growth and transport demand and oil demand is forecast to increase at an annual rate of 1.3 per cent to 2030. In comparison, natural gas demand is driven by the electricity sector. However, natural gas consumption is projected to grow slowly than power generation due to efficiency in the electricity industry. Natural gas consumption is forecast to increase at an average annual rate of one per cent during the outlook period. As a result, oil and gas will account for 32 per cent and 68 per cent, respectively, of TPES in 2030.

Bookshelf – 내 서재 이용하기

The screenshot shows the ProQuest Ebook Central Bookshelf interface. On the left, a sidebar lists 'Bookshelf' categories: Downloads & Loans (1), Recently Viewed (2), Annotated Books (0), and Saved to Bookshelf (0). Under 'Saved to Bookshelf', there are folders for 'Research', '대학도서관 수서', '경영학', '사랑과평화', and 'New Folder'. The main area displays 'Recently Viewed' books, including 'Digital Humanities : Current Perspective, Practices, and Research' and 'Advancing Digital Humanities : Research, Methods, Theories'. Annotations in red boxes explain the Bookshelf features: 'Bookshelf: 내 서재 최근 이용도서 및 검색 이력, 다운로드 된 도서 등을 확인하여 도서 이용의 편의성 제공', '최근 다운로드 한 도서정보와 이용 잔여시간 제공', '최근 이용한 도서 정보제공', and '폴더를 생성(한글지원) 하여 주제에 따른 도서 분류'.

The income elasticity of energy consumption is an estimate of how much energy is required to produce an additional unit of GDP. In general, the lower the energy intensity and the further the elasticity is below 1, the more energy efficient the economy. Income elasticity is based on the assumption that total energy consumption can be expressed in terms of GDP and as a fraction of GDP. The derivation of income elasticity is:

$$E = K \cdot GDP^\rho$$
$$\log E = \log K + \rho \log GDP$$
$$\frac{\Delta E}{E} = 0 + \frac{\Delta GDP}{GDP} \rho$$
$$\rho = \frac{\frac{\Delta E}{E}}{\frac{\Delta GDP}{GDP}}$$

where  $E$  is the energy consumption,  $K$  and  $\rho$  are parameters and  $\rho$  is interpreted as income elasticity. If the income elasticity of energy is less than 1, the economy's energy consumption grows less rapidly than GDP. If it is 1, it is growing at the same rate as GDP.

ENERGY INTENSITY

Figure 1. 2. postwar energy intensity from 1980 to 2002 for ASEAN + 3 and ASEAN + 3 minus China and the ASEAN member countries alone. China's energy intensity is so high that it causes the other countries' energy intensity levels in Figure 1 to appear low and relatively constant. The countries fall into four groupings: China and Vietnam have energy intensities of about 25,000 BTU/USD, while Malaysia and Indonesia have energy intensities of about 20,000 BTU/USD.<sup>1</sup>
